@aimeehowardclinger

Aimee Howard-Clinger is an Associate Professor of Art & Design and Area Head of the Metals and Jewelry concentration at Southern Illinois University Edwardsville. Aimee's artwork often addresses themes relating to Western medicine. Particularly, the dilemmas produced by the marvels of medical technology juxtaposed with the often intrusive procedures used to sustain and prolong life. Her work has been exhibited at numerous national and international venues, and has also been featured in multiple books. Aimee has served as a curator for metalsmithing exhibits and she also holds a US Design Patent.

Kylea's project illuminates the connections between slavery and hip-hop using chain-making techniques and stone setting. Through material and technique, Kylea explores the narrative of chain in the African American context and demonstrate the ability to reclaim and transform symbols of oppression.
- Sarah (Sky) O'Brien (2016-17): Sky's research surrounds methods of drawing with metal through a revival of historical inlay and surface techniques. Through a contemporary viewpoint, Sky has worked with stone/wood inlay, married metal inlay, Damascus, Keum-boo (attached gold), lamination, and resin inlay.
- Raquel (Rocky) Pardo-Pfeiffer (2013-14): Rocky's exploration compared the physical outcomes created by combining gold, silver, and copper in a variety of proportions (alloying), culminating in the production of a series of fine art jewelry. Throughout her research project, Rocky recorded practical field study information such as cost, maintenance, and strength of these new alloys.

RESEARCH GRANTS FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS (RGGs) FACULTY MENTOR

Southern Illinois University Edwardsville

- Miranda Wagman, RGGs (2025): Miranda's sculptural brooches serve as visual representations of the emotions and experiences women encounter when navigating the complex issues surrounding their reproductive health.
- Garrett Brown, RGGs (2022): Garrett's research project focuses on the now rare technique of hand engraving of metal as well as the incorporation of gemstone setting. Garrett utilizes these techniques and processes to address social and political commentary regarding socioeconomic status, class, and how political power is often distributed unfairly.
- Beth Browne (2021): Influenced by personal afflictions of endometriosis and premenstrual dysphoric disorder, Beth's artwork considers the plight of those struggling with invisible female reproductive issues and the challenges they face to endure physical and mental suffering while attempting to maintain a sense of productivity and normalcy in life. Although there is beauty in the ability to create life, which is often celebrated, the effects of pregnancy loss, hormonal dysfunction, disease, and infertility are often incapacitating events shrouded in a cloud of secrecy and shame. This paradox often causes afflicted individuals to project a presentable mien all the while burdened with emotional and physiological effects of a hidden disease and societal pressures.
- Tracy Welling (2021): Tracy's research project involved creating works that serve as grief attire, emphasizing the impact of loss. Tracy's contemporary works were influenced by early nineteenth century mourning jewelry which was popularized by Queen Victoria and her desire to outwardly process emotions regarding death which changed the way that society approached grieving.
- Caitlin McDonald (2016): Caitlin's RGGs proposal provided funds for a community arts-based project addressing the typically unseen (mental and emotional) side of abusive relationships.
- Melissa Hampton (2014): Melissa researched unconventional methods of torch firing enamels to produce organic, irregular and unpredictable surfaces. This exploration directly correlated with Melissa's topic of research; the lasting ecological, financial and medical effects of man-made radioactive isotopes.
- Lacey Kirkwood (2014): Lacey's research topic explored the vilification of persons who have contracted sexually transmitted diseases. She researched the application of ceramic decals on enameled surfaces to integrate both historic and cultural imagery pertaining to STDs on sculptural and wearable metal objects.

COMPETITIVE GRADUATE AWARD (CGA) FACULTY MENTOR

Southern Illinois University Edwardsville

- James Bittor, CGA 2023 Proposal (2023): James' CGA research will include investigation of the history, rituals, and cultural heritage surrounding African masks, re-envisioned through a contemporary lens. This work will preserve traditional techniques, practices, and cultural heritage, while also communicating a contemporary perspective through exploration of innovative metalsmithing processes. James will also incorporate found objects and ethically sourced gemstones and materials to produce the work.
- John Hurn, Awarded CGA Proposal (2022 – 23): John's work is an investigation of historical techniques of combining wood and metal, such as Louis XIV furniture with its ormolu mounts and the work of André-Charles Boulle who installed intricate panels of brass and tortoiseshell on wooden furniture. John's work incorporates modified variations of these ancient techniques, through the lens of a contemporary maker, to address how strategically combining wood and metal can recall the optimism of an era when marvelous inventions held out the hope of a better future; from the ability to better communicate through the discovery of telegraphy, to the tools developed to facilitate scientific discovery. John's work is designed to evoke that same sense of hope, wonder, and optimism; themes which are necessary and relevant in our current global circumstances.
